

Numbo, the party game where you guess what your friends guessed, arrives free on iPhone and iPad

The trivia game that turns everyone's phone into a controller for Apple TV now works with no TV at all, and brings free Thanksgiving, holiday, New Year's Eve and Super Bowl question packs.

October 2026. Numbo Trivia, the party game for Apple TV built around one twist, is now available on iPhone and iPad as a free download. In Numbo, you don't guess the answer to the trivia question. You guess what your friend guessed.

One player locks in a number

"How fast can a wild turkey run, in miles per hour?" Grandma secretly locks in 27.

Everyone guesses their number

Not the real answer. What would Grandma say?

Closest guesses score

Hit it exactly and the whole room sees MIND READER on the TV.

On Apple TV, friends join by scanning a QR code and play in their phone's browser, with nothing to install and no controllers to pass around. The new iPhone and iPad app adds two ways to play without a TV: a party on phones, where the host shares a four-letter code, and solo games against three bots that work offline.

Numbo plays with 2 to 6 people, so it works for a couple on the sofa as well as a full Thanksgiving table. More than 7,300 questions span 30 categories, from Science and Movies to Strange Laws and Impossible Estimates. Family mode keeps games to kid-friendly categories and everyday numbers. Seasonal packs unlock on their own through the year: Thanksgiving in November, the holiday season in December, New Year’s Eve, and the Super Bowl in February.

“Most trivia games reward whoever memorized the most facts. In Numbo, the smartest person at the table can lose to the one who knows Grandma best. The whole game is built for one moment: the reveal, when someone nails a number exactly and the room goes up.”
